LIQUOR

Cap Tikus and Wangae are traditional distilled alcoholic beverages that originate from the Minahasa region in North Sulawesi, Indonesia, and are made from the naturally fermented sap of palm trees, particularly the aren palm (Arenga pinnata), which grows abundantly in the area. The process of making these beverages has been passed down through generations, involving time-honored techniques of collecting the palm sap, fermenting it naturally, and then distilling it to produce a strong alcoholic drink. The production and consumption of Cap Tikus and Wangae are deeply rooted in the cultural and social life of the Minahasa people, where these drinks are not only consumed during social gatherings but also play an important role in traditional ceremonies and rituals. As early as the 18th century, historical records and oral traditions indicate that Cap Tikus had already become an integral element of daily life in Minahasa society, valued not only for its potency and unique taste but also for its cultural symbolism and its role in strengthening community bonds and expressing local identity.
